IN ATTESA

SEMI DI LUCE

This image shows a highly textured and aged surface, likely the cover or endpaper of an old book. The dominant colors are various shades of brown and tan, indicating significant wear, discoloration, and possibly the presence of organic materials like leather or parchment. There are large, irregular patches of a dark blue or black material, which appear to be remnants of a former decorative layer or paint that has been partially removed or worn away. The surface is covered in fine scratches, scuffs, and larger areas of abrasion, giving it a rough, tactile appearance. The lighting is somewhat uneven, highlighting the different textures and colors across the frame.
